"I see that some of the Boston papers speak of Mr. Butler as a kind-hearted, frank, learned courteous gentleman of the old school. Of that I leave the country to judge. I saw that gentleman of the old school at the theatre in a sor. Butler was in the parquette, in full view of the whole house, and acted so badly that it required the whole attention of Senator Hunts I did not know, to keep him from disturbing the audience. I sat so near him part of the time that I could hear his drunken remarks and the expostulations of his comrades. This much for the gentleman of the old school.

Loud cries were then made for Halo, in the midst of which John P. Hale came forward to the Platform, and said:

Permit me to congratulate you upon th sembled, not to say whether the Union shall be a hissing the world over [Cheers] Sommen have expressed surprise—some are aston ished at the present situation of things in thi country. I confess that, whatever other emo tions fill my breast to-day, surprise or astonish ment find no place there. I am no more sur prised at what I hear to day-at the news the elegraph brings day after day to my cars—thac I shall be surprised next autumn to see the ri pened fruit following the buds of Spring and he blossoms of Summer. My friends, we are living in the harvest time of Pro Slavery De nocracy. They have sowed their seeds. haue germinated, budded, blossomed, borne fruit, and now the historian is writing its his tory in the blood of our fellow citizens on the plains of Kansus [Cheers.] And it is going broad writing its hideons pictures in the heav ens over our heads, in the lurid light that flash es up from the burning dweltings of our own brethren, and the picture is heralded to the world by the screams of the mothers and children that have been ruthlessly driven from their homes that the incendiary has laid in ashes. My friends, the picture is not perfect There was no population to be found in this Union which was more devoted to the cause of Question, "Who has done it?" The National Administration have done it, and nobody else They are responsible to-day to the world, to the country, to heaven, and to posterity. On of your resolutions recites the objects which our fathers had in framing our Federal Constitution. One of them was to secure domestic tranquility. But where is domestic tranquility in Kansas? Trudden under foot, and lawless violence is stalking over the land in its place. Another object was to promote justice. where is justice to-day in Kansaa? Troilden under by violence. And where is liberty? Why, my friends, if it be no where else, I trust if it be an outlaw in the Federal domain, and and wherever Federal jurisdiction extends, it is in your own hearts [loud cheers,] and that under the generous impulses which now ani-mate you, you will assemble in one mighty mass under the gallant leader you have select ed, and will march to the campaign and achieve a glorious victory. I learn that it is not regarded as proper to make personal allusions, but I think it is my right to do so. Four years ago I had the honor of being nominated for President [Cheers.] My friends have told me that bach & Co's Circus, passing a large quantity I have been in the minority so long, that I made of counterfeit money. The denomination are a most excellent candidate when they expected a defeat, but when victory comes they select another leader, leaving me in the minority still or two more acrews upon us, it will bring the North together." "One or two more! Why," said I, " if the North don't come together now -if they don't arouse themselves as one manif they hear not all the voices that are coming up on every side, if they listen not to Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though they were screwed again" [Prolonged cheers and laughter.] What are our prospects? I cannot speak for the whole country, but I have come from New Hampshire. have no preferences; we are for the cause, for liberty, for the principles of the Consuitation carried out faithfully, no matter who is the standard bearer. We are soldiers for the cause and are ready to tight under any true man. It is time, my friends, that the impulses are ready to wipe out whatever of odium may have been fastened to the reputation of our States by its unfortunate connection with the present Administration, and that it is ready to vote for the gallant man whom you have selected, or any ine else who represents our cause. Hampshire is sound to the core, and I believe that the same may be said of New England. But when I come to Pennsylvania, I hear that there is some doubt. Is there? ["No, no."] It cannot be that this Commonwealth, with such a glorious beginning, with such glorious prospects, and with such a glorious future before it--it cannot be that in such a glorious contest, compared with which all other contests sink into insignificance, that she is going to beie her character and her patriots, dead and living, and hind herself to the car of Slavery. O, my friends, I do not believe it. Why, should almost be afraid that the rumblings of the dry bones of the dead patriots of another age would come back to rebuke their recreant sons who would permit such a reproach to be fastened to their names [Applause.] It can-not be; we have nothing to do but to go forward. The harvest is ripe for the sickle .-God's blessings hang over us, waiting only for us to take them. There is one glorious feature in this campaign, and that is we are fighting above-board; we have got out of the bushes; we have have had that prayer of old Grecian Aiax answered: the mists have roiled away be fore the piercing rays of the glorious sun of Liberty and Light. Here are the two hosts; there is the host that is sworn to extend the mildew of slavery over the whole land; there s no mistake-there is an open field and a fair ight. The hosts are ranged, the banners are distinct as light and darkness. The word has gone forth, and from now till the final conflict, every man has a duty to do individually. He is to be not only a soldeir, but a missionary.— The question is, whether Liberty or Slavery is to rule this country. If there is any man herewho has a brave heart in his bosom, he will thank God that this crisis has come in his day We had better settle it now than give it up to our children: better settle it by the ballot box than by the cartridge box. It is in our power to settle it by the ballot box, and in doing it we shall achieve a victory more glorious than that when Cornwallis surrendered the last British army to the American hosts [Loud cheers.]— I trust we shall go forth with one heart, one purpose, and one generous resolve. The inteligence of our selection has been flashed by the ightning from mind to mind. Let us,

THE LIGHTHOUSE.

BY W. ALLINGHAM

The plunging storm flies fierce against the pane, And thrills our cottage with redoubled shocks; The chimney mutters and the rafters strain;

Without, the breakers roar along the rocks. See from our fire and taper-lighted room,

How savage, pitile s, an i uncontrolled The grim hedizon shows its tossing gloom Of waves from unknown angry gulfs uproll'd.

Where underneath the black portentions lid, A long pale space between the night and sen Gleams swfi i; while in deepest darkness hid All other things in our despair agree,

But, lot what stor amid the thickest dark A soft and unexpected dawn has made? O welcome, Lighthouse! thy unruffled spark, Piecreing the turmoil and the deathly shale !

By such a glimpse o'er the distracted wave, Full many a soul to-night is re-possesst Of courage; ad of order, strong to save; And like e feet it works within my breast,

Three faithful men have set themselves to stand Against all storms that from the sky can blow, Where peril must expect no aiding hand, And tedium no relief may hope to know.

Nor shout they , passing brother to inform What weerings they feel, or what affright; But tranguilly in solitude and storm Abide from month to month, and show their light,
